Students at Lexington College Receive 1st Place on Submitted Paper at International Hospitality Conference

CHICAGO – Lexington College students have received 1st place for their paper, “Art and Ethics: Happiness through Hospitality,” which will be presented at the 2007 Incontro Romano International Hospitality Conference in Rome this April.

Guided by Academic Dean, Dr. Marta Elvira, the following students: Miroslava Esparza, Maura Martinez, Adriana Meraz, Sarah Kilarski, Christine Smyczek, and Jenny Yerkes will meet the conference’s Scientific Committee and present their findings. Incontro Romano is held annually in Rome, Italy, to promote research of the service sector and hospitality in participants’ many different countries.

During the days of the Congress, prior to Easter Week, Lexington students will take part in cultural tours around Rome, visits to hospitality locations, and cultural interchange with college students from all over the world. They will also have an opportunity to meet with Pope Benedict XVI.

Lexington College is a not-for-profit, private, accredited women’s college in Chicago’s West Loop offering a Bachelor’s degree program specializing in Hospitality Management with four specializations: culinary arts, event planning, hotel/restaurant management and health care & wellness.
